Canadian businessman and philanthropist Seymour Schulich created the scholarships in 2011 to encourage high school students to consider careers in STEM disciplines. To date, the program has awarded more than $11 million to 170 students. A record-breaking 1,250 high schools nominated students this year.

"Fostering leadership in STEM fields is vital to Canada's economic prosperity," Mr. Schulich said in a statement. "It is immensely important to invest in the next generation of technology innovators as they develop and hone their minds and skills to contribute to our national and global community."

Each year, every Canadian high school and Cégep can nominate one student who excels in STEM subjects and meets at least two attributes that include academic excellence, community involvement, business or entrepreneurial leadership, or financial need.

The 20 universities involved in the program select their two recipients from the pool of nominees that applied to their school. The five universities that attracted the most applicants are then allowed to select two more students.

Nominations for the 2016 program will be accepted starting in September.
